Dirtbox: I haven't tried dirtbox but I hear good things about it. I hope this helps. I'd post my own results, but I don't have the equipment or knowledge to generate a decent image for comparison. A: ZBrush offers plenty of possibilities for those who want to create realistic renders. This is a well-polished program with a full-featured suite of tools to help artists get up and running.

I've done a lot of work with ZBrush since version 3 and I wouldn't hesitate to call it my favorite 3D rendering tool. It is not cheap, though, and you'll need to be willing to spend a bit of time learning the basic interface. I would recommend looking at a few tutorials online before buying and using. But here are a few images I've done with ZBrush: Edit: ZBrush is fully customizable and provides plenty of options to help you get to your goal. It doesn't have as many brushes as maya, but I believe most of it can be done with either tool. You can go as far as creating your own brushes from scratch in ZBrush. There are dozens of tutorials on youtube about this too. I'd say you'd have a pretty good chance with Zbrush. It is much more powerful than Mudbox and probably has more things you can do than Mudbox (I haven't used Mudbox) and Mudbox is free, so if you really want to use Mudbox I'd suggest downloading it first and playing around with it a bit. Zbrush is more of a commercial application and you'll have to pay for it, but it is very powerful. I have used ZBrush, and it is a very powerful app, very easy to use. I believe it is a beta version that you can download from their website. The latest version works very good, but the upgrade from previous version will be free. Q: 82157476af
